THE Society's Inſtructions, are chiefly intended for the labouring Part of the People: 'Tis not therefore their Deſign, to engage deeply in general and political Obſervations. What has been done that Way in former Papers, or what more may be met with in this, is calculated only to remove, if poſſible, that unhappy Spirit of Negligence and Careleſſneſs, which has hitherto poſſeſſed us. 'Till that gives Place to a generous Concern for the Welfare of our Country; to an active and reſolute Purſuit of its real Intereſt; 'tis in vain to give Inſtructions, which can only then be ſerviceable, when they are received with Pleaſure, and executed with Diligence. Before the Gentlemen of this Society, can properly apply themſelves to direct the Induſtry of the Nation, it is firſt neceſſary to excite it. They muſt make Men willing to be uſeful, and afterwards inform them how they may be moſt ſo.

In one of the former Papers, ſomething has been ſaid of the natural Advantages of this Iſland, to encourage us to improve upon them, by a regular and well directed Employment of our Hands; in the reſt, the preſent Condition of our Trade, has been laid before the Readers, to convince them of the abſolute Neceſſity of a ſudden Change of Meaſures; in all of them, the Compariſon hath been fairly ſtated, between what we now are, and what we might have been; and this general Concluſion drawn, that unleſs we exert ourſelves at laſt, the ſame Indolence among the Poor, and the ſame Luxury among the Rich, which have hitherto kept us low, muſt, in the natural Courſe of Things, finally undo us.

This Concluſion, as it ſtands in thoſe Papers, upon plain and unanſwerable Proofs, has the Weight of a thouſand Arguments. If approaching Ruin cannot awaken us from our preſent Lethargy, our Caſe is deſperate indeed: No Remedy can be depended on to correct our Errors, where the Proſpect of immediate Miſery hath been of no Effect.

'Tis not therefore the Intention of this Paper, to ſtart new Matter, and multiply Arguments, on a Subject that admits of no Diſpute: One Point only, which appears of Weight to them, and was barely hinted to the Reader, the Gentlemen of this Society, think it proper to reſume; 'tis of great Moment in itſelf, and contains Matter of Encouragement, by affording reaſonable Grounds to hope, that the Amendment of our Conduct, will be immediately attended with that of our Condition.

It has been obſerved by the Society, in their late Remarks upon our Commerce, that the Commodities imported hither, a very few excepted, are in no Senſe neceſſary to us; while all them, which we export, are ſtrictly ſo to foreign Countries: This is a favourable Circumſtance in Trade, and gives the Nation that enjoys it, an unſpeakable Advantage to its Neighbours. Our Beef, our Hides, our Tallow, and our Butter, will always be wanted in the Southern Parts of Europe, for themſelves, or for their Colonies; and whatever Quantity of theſe we can raiſe, conſiſtently with the Intereſt of the Nation, will therefore always find a Market. No Legiſlature can will prevent the Importation of the immediate Neceſſaries of Life; Prohibitions of that Kind, are in themſelves abſurd, and would be little minded by the People; and until our Cuſtomers for theſe Commodities, can have Paſtures equal to our own, in a richer Soil, and under a ſcorching Sun, they muſt, at any Rate, be furniſhed from our Farms.

Our Wool is another valuable Commodity, which will be always in Demand. And ſo far is our Trade in this Particular, from any Danger of Diſcouragement Abroad, that it is the Intereſt of our next and moſt Neighbour, to invite the Importation of whatever we can ſpare.

By this is meant, of our Wool unmanufactured, and conſidered as the Produce of our Soil, which is then, with our Beef, and other Articles already mentioned, of abſolute Neceſſity to others, and a certain Export from this Kingdom. Let the Balance of Trade be never ſo much againſt them, all Countries muſt be ſupplied with theſe: They are not Things of Choice, or of Conveniency, the Uſe of which, may be prohibited or reſtrained; but, properly, Things of Need, which muſt be had independently of any inferior Conſiderations of Gain or Loſs by Trade.

Our Conſumption, on the contrary, ſo far as it is ſupplied by Commodities of foreign Growth, is, to call it by the ſofteſt Name, arbitrary only, introduced by Imitation, and ſupported by the Mode. The Legiſlature may at the ſame time confine it, and without any real Detriment to the Nation, or Hardſhip on the Subject, diſcourage or prohibit it.

This Difference is viſibly conſiderable, and in one main Branch of Trade, puts the Balance entirely in our Power. We may, whenever Prudence ſhall require it, leſſen one Article of Importation in any Degree we pleaſe, without any Apprehenſion of diminiſhing our Exports; or in other Words, bring Bullion into the Kingdom inſtead of Brandies, Wines, and other Superfluities.

It may be the Buſineſs of ſome other Eſſay, to conſider how far this natural Advantage might be carried by proper Improvements in our Husbandry; and how many more of the Requiſites of Life, we might raiſe for Exportation, by encouraging our Tillage.

At preſent, it may be more uſeful to prevent a miſtaken and pernicious Conſequence, which ſome Readers might unwarily be led into from the foregoing Obſervations.

'Tis the darling Error of our Gentlemen, to keep whole Counties under Stock; and, 'tis not to be queſtioned, but the leaſt Shadow of an Argument, to juſtify their Practice, would be readily and induſtriouſly improved upon. The Intention of this Society, lies indeed another Way; but without ſome timely Caution, what has been ſaid of our natural Advantages, would, in all probability, be wreſted to the Abuſe of them. 'Tis certainly, as it hath been repreſented, a favourable Circumſtance in Trade, to enjoy a Soil and Climate, which afford the immediate Requiſites of Life in great Plenty and Perfection: But it is the wildeſt Policy to depopulate whole Provinces, to enlarge our Exportation of them; when our own People are abundantly ſupplied, 'tis a Happineſs to be aſſured of a ready Market, for what then becomes a Superfluity; but to multiply our Stock, to the Diminution of our People, is equally inconſiſtent with common Humanity, and with common Senſe.

'Tis impoſſible that a Subject of ſo great Importance, ſhould not occur again in a fitter Place, where it may be treated at full Length: What has now been ſaid of it, is intended only as a Caution againſt Miſtakes, or at moſt, as an uſeful Hint, which the Reader may eaſily improve upon:

Stephen's Hoſpital, Feb. 7. 1736-7.

SINCE the laſt publick Account of this Hoſpital, wherein a Scheme was publiſhed, to enlarge the Fund for the Maintenance and Cure of 300 ſick Perſons, many Benefactions have been made, by People charitably diſpoſed: His Grace the Lord Primate has given Directions, for fitting up ten Beds at his own Expence, and providing them with all proper Materials and Utenſils: Five of which Beds, he is pleaſed to endow yearly, during his Life, and the other five Beds are provided for by ſeveral People, deſirous to promote this good Work; ſome for Ever, and ſome during the Lives of the Benefactors. Theſe ten Beds are almoſt finiſhed, and will be fit to receive ſick Perſons, ſome time before the 25th of March next.

The Rev. Archdeacon Williamſon, deceaſed, did, by his Will, bequeath to the ſaid Hoſpital, an Eſtate of 100 l. and ſomewhat more, per Ann. or the Value of it for Ever, for the Maintenance and Cure of poor, ſick, and diſeaſed Perſons. This Charity, when it comes in, will provide for ten Beds for Ever, and this will bring the Number of ſick People in the Hoſpital, from Forty up to Sixty.

But ſince the Hoſpital is capable of containing a much greater Number, where the Wants and Miſeries of the Poor may be provided for, in ſo convenient and in ſo comfortable a Manner; and as great Numbers of poor Creatures do daily offer themſelves, crying our for Admittance and Cure, whom the Viſitors were obliged to deny, and diſmiſs them back to their miſerable Habitations, for want of Beds and Means of Maintenance; it is to be hoped, that God will put it into the Hearts of the Compaſſionate and the Charitable, to be daily contributing to compleat ſo pious and ſo good a Work.

There have been cured and diſcharged from this Hoſpital, this laſt Year, of wounded, maimed, ſick and diſeaſed Perſons, of this City and other Parts of this Kingdom - -	214
Buried after much Charge in their Illneſs - -	23
Remain under Cure at the Charge of the ſaid Hoſpital - - - - - -	40
So that there have been this Year of poor and miſerable Objects under the Care of the ſaid Hoſpital - - - -	277
And beſides theſe, who were Inmates, and entertained at the Charge of the Houſe, there were cured and relieved of Externs, who came daily to the Hoſpital to be dreſſed and adviſed in their ſeveral Ailments - - -	485

Belfaſt, Feb. 2. The 24th of laſt Month about 5 in the Morning, the Uphemia Sloop of Lochfallot, was caſt away in a great and a violent Storm, to the Weſtward of Bangor in the County of Down; the Cargoe was 6000 Lying Fiſh; 200 Cow Hides; 100 Seal Skins; 6 Packs of Deer Skins; 6 Packs of Goat, Sheep, Calf, Lamb and Kid Skins; ſome Kelp and Lead; 1200 double Ells of Tartan, and 200 of Yarn; and ſeveral ſmall Goods bound for Dublin, and thence to Liverpool; the Maſter and Crew were ſaved, but all the Cargo was loſt, which is valued at 800 l. and all the Maſter's Property, as appears by proper Affidavits ſworn by the Maſter and Crew.

Robert Butler, Count Taffy, Thomas Stanton, Eſq; and his Lady, and ſeveral other Perſons of Diſtinction, embark'd on board his Majeſty's Yacht for England.

'Tis ſaid Richard Plummer, Eſq; is made Secretary to his Grace the Duke of Devonſhire, the new Lord Lieutenant of that Kingdom.

When the News came to Kilkenny of the King's ſafe Arrival from Holland, the Gentlemen and Officers of that Town were entertain'd in a ſplendid Manner by the Biſhop of Oſſory, and after a large Bonfire made, the Army was drawn up and fir'd three Vollies, and the Night concluded with loyal Healths, ringing of Bells, Illuminations, and other Marks of Loyalty.

The ſame Day came on before the Lord Chief Juſtice Hardwicke, in the Court of King's Bench, Weſtminſter, a Cauſe wherein Mr. Daniel Crawford, late Mariner (called Captain's Steward) on board the Devonſhire Man of War was Plaintiff, and Mr. Fenwick, firſt Lieutenant of the ſaid Ship, was Defendent: The Action was brought againſt the Defendent for an Aſſault and Battery, falſe Impriſonment, and cruel Uſage, by cauſing him to be put in Irons, (the Captain being aſhore) to which he laid to his Damage 500 l. Several Witneſſes were examin'd on both Sides, and it appeared to the Court that the Plaintiff was the Aggreſſor, and that if there was not ſome Diſcipline to be uſed on proper Occaſions, there would be no living on board; and that the Diſcipline he underwent was not a diſproportionate one to his Fault; ſo upon the whole a Juror was withdrawn.

His Majeſty is expected at the Houſe of Peers on Tueſday next, to paſs the Malt Bill, and ſuch others as are ready for the Royal Aſſent.
